Here's an answer to that question!

The movie's actors and Lionsgate producer Erica Lee have optimistically spoken about many John Wick spin-offs. Lee specifically mentioned possibilities for an Akira (Rina Sawayama) spin-off and a project about the Bowery King (Laurence Fishburne). In addition, Donnie Yen confirmed he talked about a Caine spin-off with Lionsgate, and Shamier Anderson has spoken about a solo Mr. Nobody movie with Halle Berry returning as Sophia. While the John Wick world is a lot of fun, and these characters added new dimensions to the franchise, there are way too many spin-offs in development, and they could risk diluting the series. It is starting to feel as if absolutely everyone and everything needs a backstory, which has proven to be a problem with other cinematic universes. It's no secret that the quality of the Marvel Cinematic Universe significantly dropped when Marvel Studios' output tripled, and The Mandalorian season 3 premiere had the series' lowest viewership yet (via CBR). These franchises have shown that if everything is special, then nothing is. That's a problem that Lionsgate could face. While John Wick: Chapter 4 had the highest-grossing opening weekend of the series yet, countless spin-offs could see drastically diminishing viewership.
